Briefly the plan proposes the aboliion of the office of receiver at every and office in the country and the reention of registers at their present salaries. A great portion of the law be dispensed with and one law officer, it a salary of $1,600, is to be assigned to each of the thirty-eight dis-tricts affected. The solicitor-general's office is to be abolished. The land ommissioner's salary is to be increased st,000 and his decision in land cases is to be final. Heretofore appeal has lain to the secretary. The effect of the plan will be to make Mr. Lamoreaux supreme in his department, to exinguish a great number of offices and create a few others; to leave he secretary of the interior more free to devote his attention to matters of uperior importance, and finally to ave $200,000 a year. The president then delivered his anqual report. He complimented the organization upon being able to preserve its existence during the recent adverse circumstances. He defended the action of the federation in regard to the A. R. U. strike by the assertion that Mr. R. bebs' proposition submitted to them was a virtual acknowledgment that the strike was a failure. The honest effort of the government to regulate immigration was acknowledged, but amendments to the laws were suggested, the most important of which were speedy trials of immigrants suspected of being under contract, and the sending of agents to foreign countries to inspect prospective immigrants. Secretary Chris Evans submitted his report of the finances and numerical strength of the federation. The re-ceipts from sources, including a balance November 1, 1893, of $7,177.44 were stated at $22,493.87. The expenditures were given at $17,302.08, including $3,573.34 donated to the sustenance of striking unions. Five hundred of this was given to the Debs defense fund. There has been a great change is ise of drapery enters largely into all the new schemes of interior decora-tion. The great space for folding doora between parlors, which was formerly left bare and comfortlesss to look up-on, is now draped. Even for wall coverings in houses of elaborate furnishinings, tapestry or even plain denim drapery takes the place of pa-

about drapery in the last few years, and have found that, like every other the English decorators have discovered, though the French never seem to learn it. The word "frippery" well applies to French house-furnishing. It is fussy and overdraped, while the English fashion, from which the American styles in furniture are taken, strikes a happy medium. There is not too much drapery. A neatly furnished parlor in this country should never present a similitude to a millin In summer, elaborate curtains and heavy draperies should be dispensed with, in order to admit the air freely; but in the winter, hangings not only help to furnish a room, but keep out draughts. There have been many at-tempts to revive the old lambrequin and elaborate upholstered hangings for windows, but thus far this has failed. People of the best taste continue to use a simple window pole and rings for portigrs and window curtains. A rod of wood to match the woodwork of the room is to be preferred to any elaborate, gilded pole. In selecting portiers and window curtains, it is well to remember that they should be chosen in a shade darker than the wall. Plain blue denim looks well in a room with livery white paint and a real well room. If cars.
